Are We Living in Prophetic Times: How Should Christians Prepare for the End Times?

Sixbert Sangwa*

Abstract: The article discusses the significance of recent celestial events as prophetic signs leading up to a critical period in biblical history. It highlights the blood moon observed on September 7, 2025, and a solar eclipse on September 21, 2025, both interpreted as divine warnings of imminent judgment. Additionally, the autumn equinox marks the beginning of a sacred period in the Jewish calendar, emphasizing the urgency for reflection and repentance. The author connects these events to biblical prophecies, urging readers to prepare spiritually for the approaching judgment day. The text serves as both a warning and an invitation to embrace faith in Jesus Christ as the source of salvation. Ultimately, it encourages individuals to be alert and responsive to the signs of the times, reinforcing the necessity of readiness for the fulfillment of these prophecies.

Keywords: prophetic signs, Yom Kippur, blood moon, solar eclipse, biblical prophecies, judgment day, reflection, repentance, celestial events, faith, Jesus Christ, salvation.

A pivotal event is imminent in Israel. As I write the next feast on the Jewish Calendar, After the Feast of Trumpet, is the Feast of Atonement which takes place ten days after the Feast of Trumpet and, as prescribed in Leviticus 23, is followed by the Feast of Tabernacle which happens 14 days after the Feast of Trumpet. Following the Feast of Trumpet which took place September 23-24, 2025, these subsequent days are expected to take place, respectively, on October 1st-2nd and October 3rd-4th, 2025. The Feast of Atonement is particularly designated in the book of Revelation as judgment day—Yom Kippur—when the books of life and death opened 10 days earlier are sealed. While this holy day occurs annually, this year stands apart. Three prophetic events have aligned, fulfilling three end times prophecies.

The first occurred on September 7th when millions worldwide witnessed the moon gradually darken until it turned blood red. This total lunar eclipse, biblically known as a blood moon, wasn't merely an astronomical phenomenon—it was a divine warning foretold centuries ago: "The sun will be turned to darkness and the moon to blood before the great and dreadful day of the Lord comes." (Joel 2:31). This "great and terrible day" refers to a time of judgment when God will judge the world. What many don't realize is that this wasn't the first blood moon to appear over Israel. Let's examine the historical context.

In 1948, the people of Israel became a nation once again with their own land after nearly 2,000 years of exile. During this pivotal moment of national rebirth, several blood moons appeared in the sky. This phenomenon occurred again in 1967 during the Six-Day War when Israel reclaimed Jerusalem. Once more, a red moon illuminated the heavens. The pattern was unmistakable—every time Israel reached a decisive moment in its history, the moon turned blood red.

The blood moon carries dual significance. First, it announces judgment, wars, violence, and destruction—God's wrath pouring out upon rebellious nations. Second, it reminds us of the lamb's blood shed on the cross to forgive our sins—our only hope for deliverance from judgment. The red moon serves as a warning that there's still time to believe in him and return to God.

This prophetic event appears multiple times in scripture. The Apostle Peter proclaimed it at Pentecost, and it's also written in the book of Revelation. John wrote, "And I looked when he opened the sixth seal, and behold, there was a great earthquake, and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became like blood" (Revelation 6:12). In John's vision, the blood moon is no longer a warning but a signal that judgment has begun—a judgment the entire world must face.

Every blood moon marks a significant point on God's timeline. The one on September 7, 2025, was precisely that—a warning. But this sign didn't come alone. Just two weeks later, the world witnessed another prophetic sign. On September 21, 2025, the sun went dark in broad daylight during a solar eclipse. For six minutes, the moon positioned itself in front of the sun, blocking it completely.

The Bible warns that this is another sign of judgment upon the nations. Jesus himself cautioned that before his return, we would see a clear sign: "The sun will be darkened and the moon will not give its light" (Matthew 24:29). Centuries earlier, the prophet Amos delivered the same divine warning: "I will make the sun go down at noon and darken the earth in broad daylight" (Amos 8:9). These two messengers of God, separated by centuries, both warn that when the sun darkens in daylight, God is about to act. This reminds us that the world's destiny rests not in the hands of people or governments, but in his—the Creator holds all control.

But if we look at history, we see this has already happened. In 1914, just before the terrible first world war erupted, a great solar eclipse crossed all of Europe. The darkness in the sky was a warning of the darkness that would soon arrive. Millions would die in the most brutal war the world had ever known. And more recently, the United States witnessed something unique. An eclipse crossed the entire country from coast to coast in 2017. 7 years later, in 2024, another eclipse crossed it in the opposite direction, drawing an enormous letter X over the nation. For many, this was the final warning for a nation that has turned away from God. And now in September 2025, the sequence repeats again with a precision impossible to ignore.

First, the moon turned to blood. Then the sun went dark. And just the next day, the third prophetic event would arrive. One day after the sun went dark in the eclipse on September 22nd, 2025, the autumn equinox arrived in Israel. The equinox is that precise moment when day and night become perfectly equal. 12 hours of light and 12 hours of darkness. A perfect balance that lasts only an instant because immediately after the scales tip toward darkness and night begins to overtake the light. But why is this moment so significant? Isn't it just another astronomical event?

To understand this, we must look at God's ancient calendar. The autumn equinox marks the beginning of the seventh biblical month, Tish, the month of Israel's most important holy days. And it's the season of the final harvest. And in the Bible, the harvest is a symbol of separation. The contrast between light and darkness runs throughout the entire Bible. John's gospel proclaims that Christ is the light who came into the world, but that men love darkness rather than light (John 3:19-20). Jesus himself used the example of a harvest to explain what the final judgment will be like. In the parable of the wheat and the tears, Jesus taught that good people, the wheat and evil ones, the tears or weeds, would grow together until the end. But when harvest time comes, they would be separated forever (Matthew 13:30). It might look like a mere coincidence, but the sequence is too clear to ignore.

First, the moon turned to blood, then the sun darkened, and the very next day the cycle of darkness began. This progression speaks for itself: blood, darkness, and the scales—three prophetic signs just before the great date on God's calendar: Rosh Hashanah, the Feast of Trumpets. On September 24th, 2025, the fourth prophetic sign arrived. Rosh Hashanah, New Year's Day on the Hebrew calendar, marked the beginning of year 5786 and with it, a new cycle of warning for the world. That day, Israel became the center of global attention. Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu sent a message to all Jews scattered throughout the world saying, "You are not alone." Meanwhile, more than 35,000 pilgrims traveled to Ukraine to welcome the new year with prayer and song, demonstrating that God's people gather in every corner of the earth. The true epicenter was Jerusalem. There, something unprecedented occurred—100 shofars (ram's horns) sd the event was broadcast live to the entire world. But what is really being celebrated on this day?

Rosh Hashanah isn't just the beginning of a new year. It's the day that commemorates the moment when God created mankind. According to tradition, this is when God opens the heavenly books—the book of life, the book of death, and the records of every human's deeds. This is why it's believed that during Rosh Hashanah, all humanity stands trial before the Creator as He examines each person's actions. As the sages of Israel say, on Rosh Hashanah, all human beings pass before God like a flock, and He judges them.

The celebration begins in homes when women and girls light candles. Then, in synagogues worldwide, special prayers rise up. At the heart of this observance is the piercing sound of the shofar, which cuts through the soul. Its main purpose is to awaken people from spiritual slumber—to remind them of their identity, values, and mission. In the Bible, the shofar brought down the walls of Jericho, announced freedom to slaves, proclaimed God's presence, and one day will herald the coming of the Messiah. Its sound is both a call to repentance and to hope. This is why having 100 shofars sound from Jerusalem to the entire planet was an act filled with symbolic power.

Most importantly, this day marks the beginning of a sacred ten-day period known as the "Ten Days of Awe"—a time for each person to look inward, reflect on their mistakes, repent, and prepare for the most sacred day of all: Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement. Those found righteous are inscribed in the book of life. Those found wicked are inscribed in the book of death. Those whose fate remains uncertain have these ten days to repent before the books are sealed on the Day of Atonement.

Rosh Hashanah opens the judgment period, and 10 days later time runs out on Yom Kippur when the books are closed. Israel's decision to broadcast the shofar sound to the entire world in 2025 serves as a global warning—a wake-up call. It's also a prophetic sign of what's to come. That same year, the world had already witnessed a blood moon, the sun darkening in broad daylight, and the onset of darkness. Israel sounded the trumpets from Jerusalem across the entire planet, announcing that judgment is at the door and the 10-day countdown has begun—10 days until the verdict is announced.

The final decision on Yom Kippu, is approaching, and many signs point to that day. Yom Kippur, known as the Day of Atonement, is the holiest date on the entire biblical calendar. On Rosh Hashanah, the books of judgment are opened, and on Yom Kippur they are sealed.

The Bible in the book of Leviticus tells us what happened on this day. The high priest would enter the most sacred place in the temple, the Holy of Holies, where no one else could go. He did this only once a year to ask God for forgiveness—first for his own sins and then for those of all the people. For this ritual, two male goats were used: one was sacrificed to God, while the other was called the scapegoat. The priest would lay his hands on the scapegoat, symbolically transferring all the people's sins onto that animal, and then send it away into the wilderness to carry all the guilt with it.

While this was happening, all of Israel waited in silence because they knew this was the day when God determined their fate for the year. It was the day of judgment, when life or death, blessing or curse was decided. The prophets of the Bible recognized that this very special day was a clue to something much greater that would come in the future.

Daniel witnessed in a vision how thrones were set in place, the court was seated, and the books were opened. The dead were judged according to what was written in these books based on their deeds. John in the book of Revelation saw the same vision: the dead were judged according to what was written in the books, and another book was opened—the book of life.

Yom Kippur serves as a rehearsal for this final judgment, representing what will happen at the end of time. The high priest's actions in the earthly temple reflect what will take place in God's heavenly court.

Even today, Israel deeply honors this day. The entire country comes to a standstill—highways empty, stores close, and people turn off their TVs and cell phones. For 25 hours, they fast and pray intensely to purify themselves before God. They abstain from perfumes, bathing, and marital relations. The day ends with a long blast of the shofar, the ram's horn, announcing that judgment has concluded.

On such a sacred day, when the country seems vulnerable in its stillness, remarkable events have occurred. On October 6, 1973, during Yom Kippur while Israel fasted and prayed, Egypt and Syria launched a surprise attack. This Yom Kippur War lasted nearly three weeks, shocking Israel and the world while forever changing Middle Eastern politics. Yet against overwhelming odds, Israel prevailed.

This historical event demonstrated how Israel's most sacred days often coincide with history-changing moments that fulfill prophecies. That's why the 2025's Feast of Atonement is not considered an ordinary date, amid prophetic convergence surrounding the year 2025 Following the blood moon, solar eclipse, equinox, and trumpets of Rosh Hashanah comes Yom Kippur—the day when the gates of judgment close and decrees are sealed forever—the day when God determines mankind's eternal destiny.

While this date hasn't arrived yet, the prophetic clock continues ticking. When Yom Kippur comes, all previous signs will resonate as a warning that judgment has come. But following this solemn day comes the Feast of Tabernacles, celebrating the fulfillment of everything—the moment when the Bible says God will dwell with humanity forever.

When the most solemn day of the year, Yom Kippur, ends, there's no emptiness. Quite the opposite—a celebration filled with joy begins: the Feast of Tabernacles, also known as Sukkot. For 7 days this year, from October 6th to 12th, Israel remembers how God cared for His people in the wilderness as they lived in temporary dwellings. Each family builds a sukkah, a temporary shelter with a roof of branches through which you can see the stars. In this booth, they eat, invite friends and neighbors, and some even sleep there.

This practice remembers something crucial: even though God's people lived under fragile shelters in the desert, true security was never found in walls, but in His presence.

Every day during this week, a special ritual takes place in synagogues. Worshippers take four types of plants and wave them in every direction—up, down, north, south, east, and west—declaring that God's kingdom is everywhere and fills everything.

Long ago, when the temple of Jerusalem still stood, this festival was even more spectacular. At night, they celebrated the water ceremony. Giant lamps illuminated the entire city while water was poured on the altar, asking God to send the rains needed for the new year.

It was during this festival, on the most important day, when Jesus stood up and cried out, "If anyone thirsts, let him come to me and drink. From within him will flow rivers of living water." Jesus wasn't speaking by chance. He was revealing a profound truth: the water they requested for the earth was merely a symbol of something far greater—the Holy Spirit, the only water that can quench our thirst forever.

The Apostle John gives us the final piece to understand it all. When speaking of Jesus, he writes that He "dwelt among us." What's remarkable is that the word John used in the original language literally means "pitched His tent" or "set up His tabernacle among us." Jesus Himself was God's tabernacle, God's booth here on earth.

At the end of the Bible in the book of Revelation, everything falls perfectly into place. A voice from heaven announces, "Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and He will dwell with them." Sukkot reveals the ultimate purpose of everything: a God who doesn't want to remain distant, but to dwell forever with His people. From the wilderness booths to the end of time, God's goal has always been the same—to be present among us.

Now, the complete story makes sense. The signs in the heavens—the blood moons, the eclipse, and the equinox—warned us. The trumpet sound at Rosh Hashanah announced the judgment, and on Yom Kippur, the verdict is given.

But there remains one final prophetic sign that God hid in the opening verses of the Bible when He created the world in six days and rested on the seventh. This pattern reveals the destiny of all humanity. The Apostle Peter gave us the key to understanding it when he wrote that with the Lord, a day is like a thousand years and a thousand years are like a day.

The seven days of creation aren't merely days—they're millennia. This means there would be six thousand-year periods—6,000 years of human history in which people have worked, suffered, and often turned away from God. And at the end comes the seventh day of a thousand years: the kingdom of peace that Christ promised to bring to earth.

If we examine the biblical timeline, the pieces fit together remarkably. From Adam to Jesus' first coming, approximately 4,000 years passed. From Jesus until today, another 2,000 years have elapsed. Together, that's 6,000 years—suggesting we're at the end of the sixth day. The great day of rest is very close. But there's another of God's clocks hidden in Israel's history: the Jubilee.

God commanded Israel in the book of Leviticus that every 50 years they should celebrate a year of complete freedom. The Bible says, "You shall consecrate the 50th year and proclaim liberty throughout all the land to all its inhabitants." During the Jubilee, all debts were forgiven, slaves were set free, and lands returned to their original owners. It was a complete reset of society. This law wasn't just for ancient times. The ancient sages understood it was a sign—a promise of a much greater jubilee when the Messiah would come to liberate the entire world.

Here's where the story becomes fascinating. The Dead Sea Scrolls, ancient writings discovered in the mid-20th century, were written by people meticulous about time and calendars. Their calculations, only recently understood, reveal that Jubilees are key dates in God's plan. According to these calculations, the year 2025 could mark the end of one of these great cycles—not just another reset, but the one preceding the world's complete transformation. So we now have two prophetic timekeepers: the creation clock and the Jubilee clock.

But there's a third clock hidden within two prophecies. The prophet Daniel spoke of a difficult time lasting 1,290 days, while the book of Revelation mentions a similar period of 1,260 days. These appear to be two parts of the same event. Combined, we get 2,550 days—representing the complete duration of the end times.

Pay close attention to this: if we use that date as our starting point and count exactly 2,550 days forward, we reach September 15, 2032—Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement, the holiest day for Jews and a day of judgment. Coincidence? With God, there are no coincidences.

So we have three of God's clocks, each working differently, yet all conveying the same message: First, the creation clock—the 7,000 years that are about to end. Second, the Jubilee clock—a cycle of resets pointing directly to our present time. And third, the 2,550-day clock—an exact countdown linking a heavenly sign to the day of judgment.

All these clocks, completely independent of each other, are pointing to the same hour. It's as if they're all ringing at once, growing louder and louder. Jesus told us that no one knows the day or the hour, and we're not trying to guess an exact date. This is about something far more important: recognizing the season we're in. Jesus was crystal clear with his disciples when he said, "It is not for you to know the times or seasons which the Father has put in his own authority" (Acts 1:7). And he emphasized it even more strongly. But of that day and hour, no one knows, not even the angels of heaven, but my father only.

But then, should we live in ignorance? No. Because the same Jesus who forbade us from calculating the exact date commanded us to discern the season we're living in. In fact, he rebuked the wise men of his time with a cutting question: You know how to interpret the appearance of the sky, but you cannot interpret the signs of the times (Matthew 16:3). The command is clear. Don't speculate with the calendar, but open your eyes to the signs. This means the exact day of Christ's return is hidden, not to confuse us, but to keep us watchful, alert, with our hearts ready at every moment.

We're called to recognize the prophetic season we're living in and to discern, to open our eyes to what's happening right in front of us. And in that same prophetic discourse, Jesus gave us a list of signs that would occur before his return. Signs that today feel very close. The first sign is global chaos. Jesus warned about this with these words: You will hear of wars and rumors of wars. Nation will rise against nation and there will be famines and earthquakes in various places. Today's world is full of conflicts and catastrophes. But Jesus explained that this is only the beginning of birth pains.

What does this mean? Think of a woman about to have a baby. The pains are intense, but they announce that new life is about to arrive. That's what these signs are like. They're painful, but they warn us that something new and great is about to happen. It's not the end yet, but the first signs. The second sign hits closer to home and cuts deeper. The danger won't just come from outside forces. It will grow from within the church itself. Our faith will be put to the test. Jesus warned us about persecution, that even believers would betray one another, and that many hearts would grow cold. He cautioned that countless people would turn away from the truth, deceived by false teachers who tell people exactly what they want to hear. He told us that many would abandon their faith, choosing to believe comfortable lies instead of accepting hard truths that challenge them.

But the third sign points to one specific place on earth, Jerusalem, the focal point where God's most crucial prophecies will unfold. There, Jesus reminded us of Daniel's ancient prophecy about the abomination of desolation. What exactly is this? A world leader will rise up, enter Jerusalem's holy place, and declare himself to be God. Scripture is clear. When this happens, the end times clock will start its final countdown, and there will be no turning back.

And because of this, many people today are thinking of one name, Benjamin Netanyahu. For years, Netanyahu has declared that Jerusalem is Israel's eternal capital, an undivided city. But some believe his plans go much further than that. They say he's pushing a project called Greater Israel. What is Greater Israel? It's an idea that comes straight from the promise God made to Abraham thousands of years ago: To your descendants, I will give this land from the river of Egypt to the great river, the Euphrates. This means the land God promised was much larger than the country of Israel we see on today's maps.

And this is where current wars like the one in Gaza take on new meaning. For most people, this is just politics and war between nations. But for those who study Bible prophecy, every piece of land Israel controls seems like another piece of an ancient puzzle. A puzzle that once completed would give Israel total control over that promised land. The Bible already warned us about this. The prophet Joel said God would judge the nations for dividing up my land. And the prophet Daniel described a future leader who would use violence to control the Holy Land, defying God himself.

That's why many believe what Israel is doing today looks a lot like what those prophecies foretold. So while Netanyahu claims Israel cannot be divided, he might be paving the way, perhaps unknowingly, for what the prophets announced to come true. The world sees a war over territory. But it's actually a prophetic sign because the very land God promised as a blessing will also be the place where the final great battle takes place. Ancient prophets spoke of an end time when Israel would stand alone surrounded by enemies.

But who would dare lead such an attack? And why would the entire world turn against her? The prophet Ezekiel holds the answer. He names a leader Gog from the land of Magog. And he warns us that this leader won't act alone. He will gather a massive coalition of nations, an army so vast it will cover the earth like a dark cloud. This won't be a local conflict, but a global confrontation where peoples from every direction will unite and march against the land of Israel.

Today we see tensions growing relentlessly and the conflict in Gaza could be the spark that ignites a much greater fire. The prophecy is terrifyingly specific. God himself tells this invading leader: You will come up against my people Israel like a cloud covering the land. It will be in the latter days, I will bring you against my land so that the nations may know me when I am sanctified through you, oh Gog, before their eyes. The ultimate goal isn't just the land, but a confrontation with the God of Israel himself.

But when the trap closes around Israel, the battle won't be decided by human armies. The prophet announces God's direct intervention. There will be an earthquake so powerful it will shake the entire earth. Fire will rain from heaven upon the enemy soldiers. And there will be such confusion that soldiers will turn on each other. Victory won't be won by a president or a war strategy. All the glory will belong to God.

People today see a war with modern weapons and agreements between politicians. But those of us who read the Bible see the first steps of the terrible prophecy of Gog and Magog. The final war that will prepare the way for the Messiah's return. And today Netanyahu, with his firm policies and his vision of an indivisible Israel, pushes the nation toward an expansion that others see as provocation.

The reactions won't take long. Those reactions could fit perfectly with Ezekiel's prophecy: a siege of nations surrounding Israel, a large-scale attack, and finally, divine intervention. But there remains the fourth sign, the most shocking of all, the darkening of the sky. Jesus described it with these words that make us tremble: The sun will be darkened and the moon will not give its light. The stars will fall from heaven and the powers of the heavens will be shaken. Imagine that moment. This isn't about a normal eclipse or a cloudy night. It's as if the universe as we know it stops working. The entire sky will shake.

But this great darkness doesn't mean destruction. It's like the announcement that something monumental is about to happen: the arrival of the king. In the midst of that total darkness, a light will appear cutting through the sky. That's when the sign of the son of man will be seen. No one will be able to miss it. Jesus said it will be like lightning that flashes across the entire sky. And the book of Revelation confirms it: Behold, he is coming with the clouds and every eye will see him.

For some people, seeing that light will bring a joy so overwhelming it cannot be described. But for others, it will bring terrible anguish because it will already be too late. Each person's reaction will reveal their true relationship with God. And when Jesus returns, there will be a sound that marks that moment. It will be the sound of a trumpet blown by the angels. This is incredibly important because it connects to the seven trumpets that appear in the book of Revelation. The seventh and final trumpet signals the moment when the world which has been in human hands will become the kingdom of Christ.

That will be the moment of the great gathering. The Apostle Paul explained it this way: The Lord himself will descend from heaven with a loud command, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trumpet of God. And the dead in Christ will rise first. Then we will be caught up to meet the Lord in the air. That's why the great darkness is not a sign of destruction, but a sign that the great rescue is approaching. It's like a bell calling God's children to come home.

But these four signs were not given so we could try to guess dates. They're not there to cause fear, but to strengthen our hope. They serve as an alarm to keep us alert and ready. Because right when the night seems darkest, that's when the light that never fades will appear. The king returning with power and glory. Because in the end, when all the signs are fulfilled and the heavens shake, one truth will remain that no one can escape. Man cannot enter heaven by trusting in his own works. No matter how great our achievements, no matter how righteous our paths may seem, none measure up to God's perfect standard. Before his throne, human good deeds aren't enough to purchase eternity.

There's only one way, and it's the perfect righteousness of Jesus. This righteousness isn't earned. It's received. It's not achieved through human effort. It's granted by grace. Christ lived the life we couldn't live and paid the price we couldn't pay. His cross is the bridge and his resurrection is the key that opens the kingdom's doors.

So while the whole world looks with fear at what might happen soon, those who know Christ understand that the real question isn't when will it happen, but am I ready for when it does? And the only possible preparation is to surrender to Jesus, trust in his righteousness, and live in the hope that when everything else crumbles, he will be our salvation.

That's why the decision cannot be postponed. It must be made while you're still alive. Here now, while there's still breath in your lungs, while the voice calling you to repentance still echoes. Because later, when the books are closed, it will be too late. There will be no second chances, no alternate paths. The day of grace will become the day of judgment, and everyone will be found either in Christ or outside of him.

This is the true message behind all the signs. It's not just a warning. It's an invitation. A call to wake up, to abandon self-reliance and embrace the only righteousness that can save us, that of Jesus Christ, the son of God. Because when everything else crumbles, he alone will remain. But all these signs are just a small piece of something much bigger. The biblical prophecies about Israel are crucial because they are God's prophetic clock. Thanks to these prophecies, we know how close or far we are from the end times.
